We're not even going to mention any of the other racist organizations and think tanks because there's simply no way to do them justice here. I don't think the whole business about "race realism" is a thing. It seems like it's mostly being used to make the case for racial egalitarianism using racial realism, but even that would seem to be a contradiction since racial egalitarianism is a thing whereas race realism isn't. "Race realism" is basically just a way to talk about a variety of African-American cultural practices without any of the typical linguistic baggage of the way that same type of thing is used to talk about European-American ones. "White supremacy" is basically a way to talk about pretty much any assumption about race, regardless of where it comes from, without the usual baggage of "White supremacist" or "Fascist white supremacist" and so on. That you don't like it doesn't make it a matter of "race realism" so much as it makes it "whitewashing" or "racialist". I don't think the whole business about "race realism" is a thing 09e8f5149f
